“ Mr. Carter befriended me when he first came to Spencer Sharples. 14 years old and having recently lost my dad, I had to move to the city to avoid being placed in children's service. Mr. Carter faithfully picked me up and brought me home from school allowing me to graduate. We became the closest of friends often hanging out after school; he took me to Detroit for my first time, introduced me to his friends and taught me that "a man who works everyday ought to keep some money." He often told me things I didn't want to hear because I only thought I was a man. I joined the track team because he was the coach and learned quickly that running and smoking did not mix. I lost touch over the years, but for me, meeting him when I most needed a friend was a blessing from God; I'm sure he will be missed and my prayers are with the family.
